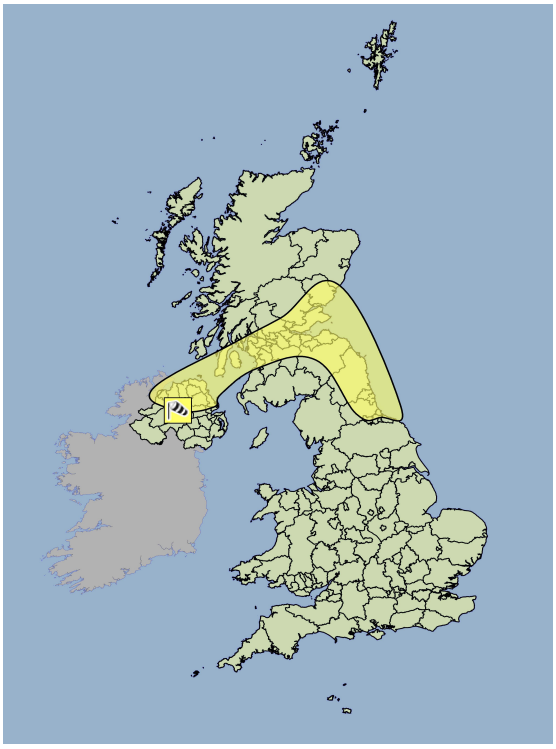
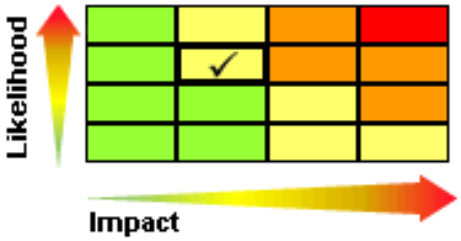
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A deep area of low pressure will pass close to the northwest of the UK during Tuesday bringing strong winds across many northern areas. It will be particularly gusty to the east of high ground in Scotland and north east England.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Wind

Valid from 06:00 on Tue, 16th Apr 2013 until 21:00 on Tue, 16th Apr 2013

Very strong and gusty southwesterly winds will develop across Northern Ireland early on Tuesday morning before extending across much of Scotland and parts of northern England later. Gusts of 50 to 60 mph are expected, perhaps more in the most exposed locations. Winds across Northern Ireland will ease by late afternoon, and during the evening in other areas.

The public should be aware that some minor disruption is likely, particularly across northern parts of Northern Ireland, central and eastern Scotland and North East England.
